The European Press Federation (EPF) was founded in 2006 by experienced press professionals, journalists and experts in the field and has developed in a very short period of time into an association representing the interests and careers of a large number of members.

The EPF is mainly represented by full and part time journalists, experts in the communication sector and media representatives. This includes editors, (freelance) press photographers and feature journalists, authors, publishers, directors, camera people, spokesmen, film critics and radio reporters. Furthermore, EPF is supported by members who are active as owners or managers of TV production companies, news and press agencies, radio senders as well as journalism offices dealing with type, image, sound and internet.

As a service orientated career and branch representative, the EPF is developing amongst other things press portals, journalistic databases, career models, recommendations for start-ups and contract specimens. A diversity of consultation services, a PDF library, trade literature, working materials, job offers, homepages, the legitimate issue of legally valid press cards, media supply and much more complete our considerable service offer. The European Press Federation is an innovator, provider of ideas and know-how pools for representatives of the media.

The EPF is independent. That means:

- Free from politics, trade unions and employers' associations
- Independent from publishers, organisations or shareholders

Especially common goals for journalists and representatives of the media as well as publishing and communication works are promoted by EPF. Co-operations with other (European) similar associations and the economy will be used to this goal, just as the co-operations with national and international press associations.
